

“The practice of peace and reconciliation is one of the most vital and artistic of human actions.”

Thich Nhat Hanh

Thich Nhat Hanh, born 1926, is a Vietnamese expatriate and one of the best known Buddhist teachers in the West. In 1966 he created The Order of Interbeing and established The School of Youth for Social Services, which helped resettle families and rebuild schools and medical centers during the Vietnam War. He has also written over 100 books and has established monastic and practice centers around the world.